

THE OLD GUARD

Etherium color Red

“Old Guard?! Idiots. No one can live like that, neat little houses all in a row, everybody the same. Give me chaos and freedom, give me...COOKIES! I WANT SOME COOKIES! Frak I’m drunk...WHAT DID YOU SAY TO ME?! thud as head hits bar
Frag Happy Reborn Slayer

The Old Guard live and operate out of The Vault, an immense, steel walled complex deep within a mountain. The members of the Old Guard were once politicians, soldiers, scientists, doctors and families of the Pre-war Earth governments. They have grown up on the stories of what things were like before the Horsemen came and they intend to see the Earth returned to it’s former glory. They dream of beautiful houses in neat little rows, white picket fences, groomed lawns and ice cream socials. Discipline and order are the keys to the way they live their lives and they believe the keys to all human survival. Everyone in The Vault contributes to the greater good.

The Old Guard rely on Alpha One, the Vault's super computer, to provide them with information and guidance. It runs their school system, assigns children to their proper jobs based on standardized testing, and monitors their plans to insure the most efficient use of personnel and resources. Alpha One is enormous. Most of its immense mainframe is stored deep beneath the Vault in a secure chamber, leaving only the interface terminals for communication. Only authorized personnel are allowed access to the interface terminals and gain knowledge from the glowing green lines of text they display.

The Old guard strive to bring order back into a world filled with chaos and it should come as no surprise that they have the military might to do it. They see a world where everyone can live in safety and security as long as they follow the rules. The military has the best training and equipment in the world and their leaders have the will to use it. They are well supplied in all areas save for one. The Vault was built by government contractors and due to cost over runs, the water reclamation system is always in need of repair. The Old Guard is ever vigilant for trades or equipment to bolster their water supply.

If you enjoy 50's style science fiction, military organization, or a certain well known series of post apocalyptic video games, welcome to The Old Guard.

“We are the descendants of the rightful leaders of humanity and make no mistake, we will lead humanity again. We will carry mankind, kicking and screaming if necessary, out of the darkness of chaos and into the shining light that is our future! ...and woe to those that choose to stand in our way.”

President John Richards in his inaugural speech.